This Is Elizabeth

She thought the English soldier very beautiful.
The rest is in Katharine Buell's story.

"Elizabeth felt she had learned something of life."

This is an illustration from Katharine Buell's story of war—

"The English Blessé"

Read it in HARPER'S BAZAR for June.

A Real Hat

Large black straw, with rosettes of blue grass. Highly picturesque, a typical HARPER'S BAZAR hat. This hat is a Henri Bendel model.

THE MEN FIGHT—THE WOMEN SUFFER

HARPER'S BAZAR Covers All Fields of Intelligent Human Activity and Human Emotion.

"There is no more patriotic duty than that of protecting the children. . . . I heartily approve the plan for making the second year of the war one of united activity on behalf of children, and in that sense a children's year. . . ."
WOODROW WILSON.
Read in the June number of HARPER'S BAZAR of the admirable work that the women of America are doing, making the war their own fight.

SWEET, SAD GIRLHOOD

It looks well and is made complete, in this lingerie frock chosen by HARPER'S BAZAR among the Henri Bendel models.
The young woman in the dress, by the way, is Miss Jeanne Eagels, now rehearsing for the leading part in David Belasco's play. Here you have a combination—real girlhood, real fashion, real actress and playwright.
HARPER'S BAZAR finds these combinations.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD

in HARPER'S BAZAR.

"I don't know whether I can make you happy!" said Aubrey.
"Dear, dear little Beryl!"
He is English; you can tell it because he has a uniform loose at the neck—it doesn't choke him.
"Dear, dear little Beryl!" is English also. We need hardly tell you that in this gentleman you are looking upon a hero of the Somme, and you can almost guess that to "Dear, dear little Beryl!" he was more of a riddle than ever when he came back.

ART REFINEMENT

The Mother of Two Soldiers—and of five other children, all well, one of them a world's champion Amateur Athlete.

MRS. GEORGE J. GOULD.

She has one son in the navy, one son in the army.

Mrs. George J. Gould is the mother of seven children, all living, all remarkably healthy, from those still in the nursery to those in the war. This picture shows that it is possible to be a mother on a considerable scale and still look young and be young. As chairman of the Entertainment Committee of the Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defense she has been indefatigable in providing for men in the service. Under her direction, weekly entertainments for soldiers, sailors and nurses are being given at Ellis Island and the Brooklyn Navy Yard hospitals. The necessary stage settings and equipment have been provided by Mrs. Gould, and well-known artists vie with each other for the privilege of playing to these "capacity houses." In order that time may not seem to have stopped in its flight, she has also supplied athletic apparatus, pool table and recreational facilities for the patients in the hospitals. The Gould town house is always at the service of the nurses at Ellis Island for luncheon, and Mrs. Gould's box at the Metropolitan Opera is reserved one night each week during the season for foreign officers who are in New York.

Another Real Hat

Miss Steinmetz created this—straw crowned, brim of black velvet puffed, a carelessly laid-on beautiful taffeta rose—any color you like. This hat, with the right face under it, would almost stop a soldier headed for the trenches.
